Climb the Mountain

I tried to climb the mountain today. As I inched my way up the path, I felt out of breath and had to turn back. I tried to climb the mountain today. But it was so hot outside, I thought I had better stay in my nice air-conditioned house and rest up for tomorrow’s attempt. I tried to climb the mountain today. On my journey, darkness started to fall and I was full of fear, so I had to return to a safe place. I was ready to climb the mountain today. But I had so many other things to do, so instead of climbing the mountain I took care of the much more important tasks. I washed my car, mowed the grass, and watched the big game. Today the mountain will have to wait. I was going to climb the mountain today, but as I stared at the mountain in all its majestic beauty, I knew I had no chance of making it to the top, so I figured, “Why even begin trying?” I had forgotten about climbing the mountain today until an old friend came by and asked what I was up to lately. I told him about all my plans to climb that mountain someday. I went on and on about how I was going to accomplish the task. He stopped me and said, “I just got back from climbing that mountain. For the longest time I told myself I was going to try to climb it but never made any progress. I almost let the dream of making it to the top die. I came up with every excuse why I could not make it up the mountain, but never once did I give myself a reason why I could. One day, as I stared at the mountain and pondered, I realized that if I didn’t make an attempt at this dream, all my dreams would eventually die. The next morning I started my climb. It was not easy, and at times I wanted to quit. But no matter what I faced, I placed one foot in front of the other, keeping a steady pace. When the wind tried to blow me over the edge, I kept walking. When the voices inside my head screamed, ‘Stop,’ I focused on my goal, never letting it out of sight. I kept moving forward. I could not quit, because I knew I had come too far to stop now. Time and time again I reassured myself that I was going to finish this journey. I struggled mightily to make it to the top, but I CLIMBED THE MOUNTAIN! I have to be going,” my friend said. “Tomorrow is a new day to accomplish more dreams. By the way, what are you going to do tomorrow?” I looked at him, with intensity and confidence in my eyes, and said, “I HAVE A MOUNTAIN TO CLIMB.”
